Kremlin May Build Pipe Units

Move Considered Reply to Reagan

By Dusko Doder Washington Post Service

MOSCOW — In what appears to be a response to President Reagan's escalating trade war, the Soviet Union is reported by Westcided to produce its own large compressor stations for five domestic pipelines due to be built

A West European businessman with experience in Soviet pipeline equipment imports said he was advised that the Soviet government would build the large 25-megawatt unbines for such stations at the LMZ plant in Leningrad.

This means, he said, that expected Soviet contracts for the construction of 130 compressor stations for five trunk pipelines would not materialize. He estimated that companies in West Germamy, France, Italy and Britain would lose more than $10 billion worth of business if, indeed, the Soviet Union has the capacity to build the stations.

It was not possible to ascertain whether the Russians are actually developing the turbine, or whether the reported development is an effort to pressure Western European governments to seek a reversal of Mr. Reagan's embargo. It is oot even known whether the reported go-it-alone approach represents a basic strategic decision. Mr. Reagan's decision enlarged the ban on sale of U.S. oil and gas equipment to Moscow to cover European subsidiaries of American companies as well as firms producing such equipment under li-

In their final communique, which also dealt with controversial transatlance trade issues, the Iran-Iraq conflict and the expansion of investments in Europe, EEC leaders said that "the establishment of a final peace in Lebanon requires the complete and prompt with-drawal of Israeli forces from that country as well as the departure of all foreign forces except those which may be authorized by a legitimate and broadly representative government of Lebanon."

At an earlier news conference Tuesday, Britain's foreign minis-ter, Francis Pym, described the summit meeting as "useful and im-portant." On U.S.-EEC trade is-sues, he said, "the right balance" had been struck in the final communiqué between those EEC members that have advocated a hard lioe on relations with the Reagan administration and those that have pressed for continued negotiations with Washington.

The communique's language regarding U.S.-EEC relations, while critical of the administration, was considerably toned down from ear-hier versions, summit participants said, largely at the urging of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain in the interests of what Mr. Pym described as "the strongest possible alliance.

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is considering a plan for not renewing the United States' 6-year-old grain agreement with the Soviet Union, which guarantees Moscow the right to buy at least 6 million tons of U.S. wheat and com a year.

The State Department has recommended that the controversial agreement be allowed to lapse when it expires Sept. 30, even though the Department of Agriculture, Midwestern congressmen and some farmer groups want it ex-tended and even expanded.

A top-level Cabinet council meeting scheduled to make the de-cision Monday was canceled, officials said, presumably because of the abrupt resignation of Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. last Friday. No new date has been set

The decision promises to be controversial, particularly coming in advance of midterm congressional elections in November and at a time when farm income is falling for the third-year in a row.

One U.S. official speculated that a formal decision on the future of the grain agreement may be de-layed indefinitely until the agreement lapses automatically Sept. 30, in order to minimize publicity. But a White House official insisted Monday that "it will not go by de-

START Gets Under Way in Geneva Reagan Sends Letter Urging Reduction in Weapons

Washington Post Service
GENEVA — The United States and the Soviet Union opened talks here Tuesday on reducing their long-range nuclear missile and bomber forces, negotiations that President Reagan called "oce of the most important tasks of our

The president's assessment was made in a letter to Edward L. Rowny, the chief U.S. delegate to the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks, or START. Mr. Rowny, in turn, read portions of the letter to his Soviet counterpart, Ambassador Viktor P. Karpov, during their first houriong meeting Tuesday at Villa Rosa, the Soviet mission in the hills overlooking Lake Geneva.

Mr. Reagan said that despite more than a decade of previous arms talks, "nuclear weapons con-tinue to accumulate, and the stra-tegic relationship between the Soviet Union and the United States has steadily become less stable."

The president attributed this to a "massive buildup" of Soviet missile forces over the past 15 years.
But be said that "an historic opportunity now exists" for both countries to break this process and thus "greatly reduce the nuclear anxiety that has become such a conspicuous feature of public concern throughout the world." Mr. Reagan said the two super-powers "are trustees for humanity in the great task of ending the menace of nuclear arsenals" and said he was convinced this could be accomplished if the two nations agree that "the only legitimate function of nuclear arms is to deter

Although Mr. Rowny, at a brief press conference after the meeting declined to describe Mr. Karpov's reaction to the letter, the Soviet ambassador also made a generally positive statement about the ultimate need for a new arms agree-ment when he arrived in Geneva on Sunday. Nevertheless, the two sides enter the oegotiations very far apart on how to reduce these arsenals and how to achieve what the U.S. side

For example, Mr. Karpov said Moscow favors substantial reductions in strategic arms but also wants "at the same time" to set effective limits on the qualitative im-provement of such weapons. This means the Soviet Union is certain to demand a halt or severe restricdons on the deployment on new U.S. weapons, such as the MX, Trident-2 and Cruise missiles and new bombers.

For this round of talks the United States has proposed a one-third reduction in the number of ouclear missile warheads by both super-powers — from about 7,500 to 5,000 warheads apiece.

In a separate round of U.S.-Soviet talks Tuesday, negotiators met for more than three hours in the seven-month-old discussions on in-termediate-range ouclear forces in Europe. No details were disclosed. except that the negotiators would

Some Kerntester since the Beirut satellite station By Norman Kempster

JERUSALEM — After complaints over censorship, Israel has totally denied television networks the use of satellite ground-station facilities to transmit videotape originating in West Beirut.

In addition, Hirsh Goodman, the military correspondent for the

He reported that some soldiers at the front are asking serious questions about Israel's war aims. He said that troops understand the strategic reasons for capturing additional points along the Beirut-Damascus highway, "but cannot fully understand why this should have been worth so many lives." ## Salvadoran Audit Finds Possible Corruption in Land Reform Program

New York Times Service
SAN SALVADOR — The Salvadoran agency administering the land redistribution program is so poorly run as to raise questions of impropriety and corruption, according to a Salvadoran government audit. The audit also con-cluded that it was not yet possible to determine bow the agency has spent funds provided by the Unit-ed States.

The audit said that the accounting and financial departments of the agency, the Institute for Agrarian Transformation, "were incompetent to implement accounting systems and technical controls." It noted that, "as a result of the lack of basic criteria, the audit of the funds initially given by the Agency for International Development has not been finished."

The audit was conducted by the Court of Accounts, an independent agency. The audit of the Insti-tute for Agrarian Transformation (ISTA) covered the 17-month period after the government's intro-

PARIS - Industry Minister Pierre Dreyfus and Minister of National Solidarity Nicole Questiaux resigned Tuesday, according to Michel Vauzelle, a presidential spokesman. The resignations were the first from the French Cabinet since the Socialists came to power more than a year ago.

Mr. Dreyfus, 74, had been expected for some time to resign because of ill health. His portfolio will be added to that of Jean-Pierre Chevenement, minister of scientific research and technology.

Mrs. Questiaux, 52, was widely reported to have resisted sharp ex-penditure cutbacks ordered by President François Mitterrand to reduce a beavy deficit in the social security budget. · Agreed to refer conditions osed by Greece for continued EEC membership to a meeting of the group's foreign ministers scheduled for July 20. Greek Premier Andreas Papandreon told the summit leaders that Greece could not apply the EEC's value-added tax before 1984.

Schmidt Vows to Fight Bias Against Americans The Associated Press

BONN — Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, in a letter to the U.S. commander in chief in Europe published on Tuesday, pledged his full support for efforts to maintain good relations between American servicemen and West German civilians and promised to fight racial discrimination energetically. Mr. Schmidt's letter was in response to one sent June 9 by Gen. Frederick J. Kroesen, in which the general wrote. The facts are that American soldiers usually enjoy warm acceptance in communities in which they serve and from most of the German people, but in re-ceot years the spirit of friendship has been marred by small oumbers of public establishments where they are denied access or service."

WARSAW — Poland's state-run news media carried sharp new denunciations of Solidarity on

The only matter that Israel is willing to discuss, Israeli officials emphasized, is the route that guer-rillas will take out of Lebanon after surrendering their arms.

Their destination, the high official said, is up to Arab or other countries that prove willing to receive them. The same official said last week the guernillas would not be allowed to go to a country bordering Israel. But the Cabinet on Sunday discarded that condi-tion, apparently convinced that Jordan, Syria and Egypt — the three countries that along with Lebanou border the Jewish state — will impose tight controls on any guerrillas that take refuge on their toil

Based on past experience, this cooviction seemed likely to be borne out. The Jordanian Army regularly patrols the Jordan River frontier to prevent guerrillas from infiltrating into the Israeli-held West Bank — even though King Hussein still claims the area does not belong to Israel.

Although it backs the PLO and sponsors the Seiga commando or-ganization under the PLO umbrella, Syria has traditionally imposed tight controls on Palestinians within Syria. As for Egypt, it has signed a peace treaty with Israel under whose terms it is obliged to refrain from allowing hostility against Israel from Egyptian soil.

Soldiers Oppose Invasion

TEL AVIV (AP) — Four Israeli soldiers who fought in Lebanon told a news conference Tuesday that they did not believe the Palestinian guercilla problem could be resolved by force.

The four — a captain, two sergeants and an air force pilot said they opposed Israel's invasioo of Lebanon on moral and political grounds. They also published a pe-otion in the daily newspaper Yedioth Ahronoth with 40 signatures of soldiers who fought in

"We at the front felt that we were betrayed," said Sgt. David Urbach, a moviemaker in civilian life. "We were given a mission that is morally very hard to carry out. We did our duty as soldiers and now we feel we are doing our duty as civilians by protesting."

They said they had no political affiliations. The four are reservists who were called up when the inva-sion was launched June 6. They were discharged when the army began sending the first wave of reservists home.

Yugoslav Communists End Congress

BELGRADE - Yugoslavia's ruling Communist Party wound up its four-day congress Tuesday by urging a new collective leadership to strictly implement Tito's legacy of nonalignment and workers' self-man-

The 12th congress, the first since Tito's death in 1980, dissolved old party bodies and approved the new leadership that was elected earlier this year by congresses of Yugoslavia's six constituent republics and two autonomous provinces. Much of the focus of the congress was on the economy and incidents of extreme nationalism.

At its closing session, which was broadcast live over radio and television, the congress adopted resolutions on future development of the party and the country in the next four years. Resolutions were passed reaffirming the country's unique brand of self-managing Socialism at home and the policy of nonalignment in international relations.

BRUSSELS — Spanish and Portuguese hopes of early entry into the European Economic Community suffered a setback Tuesday when leaders of the 10 member governments adopted a delaying measure initiated

The 10 decided during their two-day summit to order the executive commission to examine all the consequences of Spanish and Portuguese entry. Spain and Portugal boped to join at the start of 1984, Diplomats said the move was certain to delay Spanish entry.

The diplomats said French President François Mitterrand's insistence on a thorough review of enlargement at a late stage in negotiations was broadly supported by all members except Britain, the Netherlands and Belgium. France argues that the rapid entry of Spain, and to a lesser extent of Portugal, would create stiff competition for its Mediterranean producers of fruit, vegetables, wine and edible oils.

White House officials contend that Mr. Haig never was challenged as the prime policy-maker during the crisis in Lebanon, but that he was repeatedly upset by what he regarded as personal slights or infringements of his power. State Department aides assert

Mr. Haig had some grounds for being unhappy with the way Mid-dle East policy was being conduct-ed, and Mr. Haig himself has refused to discuss the reasons for his resignation.

Departure Expected Thursday

Mr. Haig is still conducting policy as secretary of state even though George P. Shultz has been designated as his successor. But White House officials said they believed Mr. Haig would formally give up the office Thursday, turning the department over to Deputy Secretary Walter J. Stoessel Jr. until Mr. Shultz's nomination is confirmed by the Senate. That is not expected before late next month.

Relations between the two countries are strained by a dispute over development and military aid. which Mr. Mobutu has renounced after criticism to Congress of his human rights policies and a recommendation by the House Foreign Allairs Committee that aid to Zaire be reduced this year from the 359.5 million proposed by the Reagan administration to $35 mil-cal position on Israeli accons in Lebanon than Mr. Haig has recommended. But in discussing Mr. Haig's unhappiness with White House officials, some of his aides pointed to his concern that signals were being sent to the Arah world from the White House about the Lebanese situation that were different from those from the State

Specifically, they said Mr. Haig was initially upset last week when he learned from Philip C. Habih, the special Middle East envoy, that the Sandi Arabians were asserting in Beirut that William P. Clark, the national security adviser, had as-sured the Saudi ambassador in Washington, Faisal Alhegelan, that the United States had nbtained Israel's agreement to withdraw its forces about three miles from Beirat This troubled Mr. Haig because the was telling the Saudi Arabians at the same time that the United States could not guarantee Israel would not invade West Beirut and that the only way to prevent an at-tack was to end the Palestine Liberation Organization's military presence in the Lebanese capital. If Mr. Clark had indeed told Mr. Alhegelan the Israelis would pull back, this would serve to encourage the PLO to resist the pressure being put upon it.

Interviews with White House and State Department officials have now produced a version of events that does oot substantiate the "two-channel" theory.

On Priday, June 18, Mrs. Alhegelan, the wife of the Saudi envoy, paid a call on Mr. Reagan's wife, Nancy, to hring a letter signed by the wives of six Arab ambassadors in Washington calling for an end to the bloodshed in Lebanon. Mrs. Reagan asked Mr. Clark to attend the brief meeting, and he notified the State Department, which offered no objections.

Mr. Clark has contended that as a rule he does oot meet with foreign ambassadors so as not to undercut the State Department, But after Mrs. Albegelan left, her husband telephoned and asked if he could see Mr. Clark on Samrday morning. White House officials said Robert C. McFarlane, Mr. Clark's deputy, checked with Nicholas A. Veliotes Jr., assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern and South Asian affairs, who said he had no problem with the meet-

Mr. Alhegelan expressed concern about the pending visit of Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel to Washington that Moo-day to see President Reagan, and Mr. Clark, according to the White House, expressed hope Mr. Begin's visit would lead to a settlement in Lebanon. They also discussed

On Tuesday, June 22, while Mr.
Begin was still in Washington, Mr.
Alhegelan went to see Mr. Clark to

Saudi Denial

Last Thursday, the day Mr. Haig told Mr. Reagan he was thinking of resigning, Mr. Habib informed Washington of the reports that Mr. Clark had given assurances of an Israeli wilhdrawal. When Mr. Velices selved him Mr. When Mr. Veliotes asked him, Mr. Clark denied he had given such as-surances to the Saudi envoy.

The State Department was later told by the Sandi Arabians that they had never passed such infor-mation to the Lebanese and the PLO, and that it was a "rumor" that had grown in Beirut,

Mr. Haig himself met with Mr. Alhegelan last Wednesday and re-portedly told him the United States saw no way out of the situation except for the PLO to pull back. The Saudi envoy urged the United States to bring about an Israeli withdrawal. This led some administratioo officials to speculate that the story of the discussion with Mr. Clark might have been a fanciful report from the Saudi Embassy. The Saudi ambassador did not reply to a request for amplifi-cadon of his meeting.

White House and State Depart-ment officials said Mr. Veliotes told Mr. Haig be was convinced Mr. Clark was telling the truth about the exchanges with the Saudi envoy. They said Mr. Haig seemed to accept this version at the time. Subsequently, however, Mr. Haig expressed doubts to others about what Mr. Clark was

San Francisco Enacts Pistol Ban

Police, Store Owners Among Those to Be Exempted

By Judith Cummings

New York Times Service
SAN FRANCISCO — The Board of Supervisors has passed a law banning most residents from owning pistols, making this the first large city in the United States to do so. The vote was 6-4.

The ordinance makes ownership The ordinance makes ownership of a pistol a misdemeanor punishable by up to 30 days in jail and a $500 fine. Rifles and shotguns are not included in the prohibition, and exemptions are provided for the police, military and security personnel, gun collectors, private investigators, licensed target shooters and private store owners who obtain permission from the who obtain permission from the

The law will take effect 30 days after it is signed by the Mayor Di-anne Feinstein. Pistol owners then have 90 days to dispose of their weapons.

The ban was proposed in February by Mrs. Feinstein, who assumed office after the handgun killings of Mayor George Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk by a former supervisor, Dan White, in 1978. The killings, which took place in City Hall, are widely credited with helping bring about some form of stronger firearms control.

Challenge Expected

The ordinance is virtually cer-tain to be challenged by opponents who contend that only the state of California, not local governments,

The board of British Rail, which runs the 11,500-mile network, said can regulate firearms. The National Rifle Association, the measure's major foe here, plans to file a suit seeking to overturn the new law, said Paul Stone, the group's national spokesman.

Even the law's strongest advocates maintain that it may be primarily symbolic. Mrs. Feinstein, marry symbolic. Mrs. reinstein, conceding the difficulty of enforcing the law, called the ban's passage Monday a barometer of public discontent over gun-related crimes and of public frustration over the failure of state and federal legislators to enact stronger gun controls. Last week a statewide initiative that would require the owners of all "concealable firearms" in California to register them with the state easily qualified for the November ballot.

The concept of a citywide ban received its first test in the nation last February in Morton Grove, III., a suburb of Chicago. Officials there reported that only a few guns had been turned in.

No Raids

Mrs. Feinstein has acknowl-edged that the San Francisco law's effectiveness will depend on public cooperation. Responding to contentions by some opponents that the ordinance will lead to illegal searches and seizures of the property of private citizens, the mayor and Police Chief Cornelius Murphy have repeatedly asserted that there would be no attempt to track down weapons or collect them from people's homes.

Mr. Stone asserted that experience had shown that residents would not relinquish their pistols, and he assailed the ordinance as a law that "will make criminals out of thousands of law-abiding cinzens."

City officials say that because California law does not require registration of guns sold second-hand, there is no reliable estimate of the number of pistols in this city of 679,000 people.

In lobbying the supervisors for pessage, proponents of the law stressed recent figures that show gun-related crimes on the rise, par-ficularly domestic violence or "gun firings in the heat of violence," while overall crime has decreased.

Lobbying here by the NRA and similar pro-gun organizations was limited. Mr. Stone said the association's major effort consisted of two public mailings. Supervisors on both sides of the issue said they received about equal amounts of mail and telephone calls from the ban's opponents and supporters.

The city council of Berkeley, across the bay from San Francisco, voted 8-1 on June 22 in favor of a ban on pistols. The same day, Oroville, a city of 9,000 north of San Francisco, did the opposite, order-ing the city attorney to draft an or-dinance that would require a pistol to be kept in every household.

Shuttle Astronauts Beat Problems To Carry Out Key Pollution Test

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The space shuttle astronauts overcame trouble with Columbia's mechanical arm on Tuesday and hoisted a pollution monitor to help clear the way for the next flight, on which the ship will hant satellites for a fee.

The shuttle, in the third day of its fourth and final test mission, now has logged two weeks in space since it started flying last year.

It is beginning to perform as routinely as an airliner.

The astronauts, Capt. Thomas (Ken) Mattingly and Henry W. Hartsfield, had difficulty with the computer-controlled operation of the payload-grabbing apparatus on the end of the 50-foot (15-meter) Canadian-built arm. But after more than an hour of troubleshooting with the help of instructions from mission control, they reported they could operate the arm manually.

They used the boom to lift the 800-pound (360-kilogram) gas and particle detector out of the bay to start the last series of contamination surveys around Columbia to look for pollution escaping from the shuttle that might interfere with future cargoes. The work was one of a number of tests that had to be done to clear the way for the first operational mission, set for Nov. 11, when Columbia will haul two commercial communications satellites into orbit for the first time.

The possibility of a delay in the next flight was raised by a space agency announcement that parachute failure was the reason the shuttle's twin solid propellant booster rockets sank in the Atlantic after being jettisoned at an altitude of 31 miles on Sunday.

Kennedy Attacks Reagan's Record To Cheers of NAACP Convention

By Sheila Rule New York Times Service

BOSTON - Interrupted 35 times by applause from delegates to the annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy said President Reagan presides over "the most anti-civil-rights administration" in modern U.S. history.

His message calling for vigilance extending to the ballot box was echoed later Monday evening by Margaret Bush Wilson, chairman of the NAACP board. In her speech, she called for increased political action to battle the "domestic war" against poor blacks and tic war" against poor blacks and other disadvantaged citizens.

Sen. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, who was emerging from an enthusiastic reception Sunday at the Democratic national conference in Philadelphia, was greeted warmly as he identified areas in which he said blacks and the poor had been harmed or abandoned by Mr. Resgan. He congratulated the group for its effort to have the Voting Rights Act of 1965 extended. The only way that real change will truly come is by choosing representatives who fully share our goals," he said. "Across this land, let us act on the instruction of this convention: 'Elect we must — leadership we can trust.' We will wage the same fight for racial jus-tice on every front, against the most anti-civil-rights administra-tion in the modern history of this

sen. Kennedy, a probable candidate for the Democratic Party's 1984 presidential nomination, attacked Mr. Reagan for his appointments to civil rights posts, his cuts in educational and social programs, and his stands on affirmative action, the economy, Haitian refugees, human rights, arms control and tax exemptions for racially segregated schools.

"How dare anyone say that no one is hurting?" asked Sen. Kennedy. "You can see the burt on the faces of the unemployed." In a phrase he used in a speech at his party's midterm convention during party's midterm convention during the weekend, he added: "The Reagan cheese lines of 1982 are as unacceptable as the Hoover bread lines of 1932."

As he concluded, delegates rose in an ovation, then linked hands and sang "We Shall Overcome." They were joined by Sen. Kennedy, his son Patrick, Mrs. Wilson, and Carlton Gray, grandson of Benjamin L. Hooks, executive di rector of the association. Later this week, the 3,000 delegates to the 73d annual meeting will be addressed by former Vice President Walter P. Mondale, an-other likely Democratic presiden-tial candidate.

In Mrs. Wilson's prepared re-marks, she attacked the administration, Congress and the judiciary for what she called their "ideological war against the disadvan-taged. She also said that the duty of blacks and the association is clearer than it has been in years, and the weapon is the ballot.
The delegates unanimously passed an emergency resolution directing the NAACP to take steps to disavow attacks on the mental capacity of blacks and calling for assurances from the president that racism and discrimination will not be tolerated in the armed services. The resolution was largely in response to a report by the Brookings Institution that the nation's all-volunteer armed services had become racially imbalanced, as well as to the problem of discrimination against American soldiers in West Germany.

Pierre Balmain, 68, French High Fashion Designer, Dies

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches PARIS — Pierre Balmain, 68, a leading fashion designer, died Tuesday at the American Hospital of cancer of the liver after a two-month illness, his salon said.

Over 37 years, Mr. Balmain made clothes for Queen Fahiola of Belgium and Queen Sirikit of Thai-land and such celebrities of the entertainment world as Marlene Dietrich, Sophia Loren, Michele Morgan, Ingrid Bergman and Brigitte Bardot. He also developed a successful perfume, ready-to-wear and accessory business with 130 outlets around the world.

Mr. Balmain reigned at the height of high fashion in the 1950s and 1960s, when a simple round-ing of a shoulder or dropping of a hemline by the Parisian couture houses sent shock waves through the clothing industry.

He was born in the Savoy region. His father, a shopkeeper, died when he was 7, and he was raised by his mother. Mr. Balmain studied art and architecture before winning his first job in the Mo-lyneux salon in 1934. He became an assistant designer at the Lucien Lelong salon in 1939 and, after

In 1945 Mr. Balmain opened his own fashion bouse in Paris and presented his first collection. He was praised by the press as a sober, youthful and vigorous talent.

Mr. Balmain quickly achieved fame for elegant design, notable examples being a gold-buttoned er-mine reefer and white mink trench coat. His clothes were cut and fin-ished of fine fabrics in such a way that they defied passing fads.

Gina Lollobrigida, Jennifer Jones, Claudette Colbert and Vivien Leigh were among the other celebrities who ordered his lavish evening gowns, known for decades as the most beautiful in Paris, glittering with hand-embroidered beads and sequins, rich with feathers and lace.

Mr. Balmain expanded his busi-ness with a New York shop in 1951 and another in Caracas in

He finished his final collection for next month's showings while in the hospital and insisted that they be held as scheduled. The designs will be shown July 26, and the Balmain house will continue under another designer yet to be selected, possibly his assistant, Erik Mor-

Off to a Belated Start

The world's oldest established permanent floating disarmament conference has reopened in Geneva. It bas been a long time since America refused to ratify the SALT treaty, but now it and the Soviet Union are sitting down again to work to contain strategic nuclear weapons - and the heat's on.

The freeze and other proposals emanating from the disarmament movement may confuse the specifics, but they have aroused political pressures that generate hope for progress. Had this swell of public support come three years earlier, the SALT-2 treaty probably would have been ratified. What, if anything, can be achieved now, with only 18 months before the next U.S. presidential campaign?

There is a temptation to say, "Not much." That undoubtedly is the desire of some in the Reagan administration who distrust the arms control process and believe security can come only from a heavy American military huildup. This view predominated through the early months of the Reagan presidency, but it has now been challenged in enough different ways to encourage some optimism:

 Linkage of arms control to political issues has been put aside. The world need not wait for Afghanistan or Poland to be solved before anything is done to lighten the shadow of the Bomb.

• The United States has stopped evading negotiations. Advocates of credible proposals have succeeded in delaying, to a second phase, a variety of proposals that would stymie any first phase, such as demands for equal "throw-weight." The Reagan proposals fit into the mainstream of past SALT negotiations, to reduce and limit warheads on both land- and sea-hased ballistic missiles.

 Most important of all, advocates of arms control in the American government have prevailed in ohtaining a public commitment from the president to abide by the chief provisions of SALT-2, so long as the Soviet Union continues to do so,

None of this means that the Soviets will accept, as is, the Reagan proposals now offered. These seem to provide for equality in both reductions and the numbers of missile warheads to remain, but in fact would require disproportionate Soviet culbacks.

Moscow has not rejected the concept of cutting missile warheads on both sides from 7,500 to 5,000, but it has expressed reservations about a provision limiting land-based missile warheads, where its strength is concentrated, to half that number. And it insists on including, as in SALT-2, limits on bomber and Cruise missile warheads, where America has a substantial lead. Still, unless there are unrevealed catches in the Reagan plans, realistic Soviet counterproposals could bring the two sides into serious negotiation.

The objective then would be a simplified treaty, more like the SALT-1 interim agreement than the intricate SALT-2 treaty. It would not be easily achieved - and new technology might make it impossible. Like SALT-1 and 2, it would not close the socalled "window of vulnerability" of American land-based missiles. But General Edward Rowny, the U.S. negotiator, has already excluded that as a negotiating objective, a position that can bring a strategic arms agreement much more easily within reach.

A new agreement may be too hard to finish in this short period. If so, Mr. Reagan could ask for congressional endorsement of his pledge to ahide by SALT-2. Various ways of doing that have recently heen suggested hy. among others. Henry Kissinger, who says: "I bave a great difficulty understanding why it is safe to adhere to a nonratified agreement while it is unsafe formally to ratiwhat one is already observing."

That would not bring the oldest establish-

Haig's Main Problem Seems Sure to Survive Him

WASHINGTON - George Shultz is W strong, as Hemingway would have it. in Al Haig's broken places — so plainly so that it is tempting to believe that all will be sweetness and light, steadfast and coherent. firm and effective in the future conduct of Ronald Rengan's foreign policy.

Forget it. Life in the policy-making trenches may be pleasanter, but, as the timing and manner of Haig's departure perfectly illustrate, the problems afflicting the Reagan handling of foreign policy owe far less to defects of personalities than they do to Reagan's defects in management.

True, the secretary of state-designate is not touchy, vainglorious, gratuitously combative, given to public posturing. Unlike Haig, Shultz is easy to get along with. Also unlike Haig, he is California-comfortable. with Reagan. He is, he says, "sympatico"

But to conclude from all this, as some do, that Shultz will stay "sympatico" is to forget that Haig said the same sort of thing when took the ich. The intensity of the wender. he took the job. The intensity of the vendet-tas may bave done him in, finally. But the vendettas were rooted in real differences over policy for the Middle East. China. Europe and East-West relations.

It was unforeseen events and unvielding forces — po-liucal, diplomatic, military — that took Haig in tow and tugged him, by his own account, off the president's course,

Given what we know about Shultz, you have to allow for at least the possibility that this will happen again, in less cantankerous but not necessarily less divisive ways. For he would seem to be strong in places Haig was strong: tough-minded, intelligent, widely traveled schooled in the hard knocks of the policy-making process of government. He gives a sense of someone who believes that an excess of dogma is no virtue and that a realistic rolling with the punches of allies as well as adversaries is not always a vice.

The question, then, is not whether new crises, or those now boiling, are going to generate sharp clashes and deep differences. That is inevitable, if only because the State Department, the Defense Department, Commerce. Labor, the CIA, whatever, serve dif-

The deeper question is whether, with a minimum of breakage, the team on which Shultz is expected to be a true-blue "team player" can now be made to play like, well, a team. And the answer will have to come, in the case of Shultz's stewardship at State, as it should have come far earlier in the case of Haig's: from the president.

Not the least of the lessons of the Haig upheaval is that Ronald Reagan has not yet managed to figure out how to manage the conduct of foreign policy. No other theory of the case adequately explains the break-down of presidential control over the orderly execution of what are supposed to be. after all, presidential policies.

The split-level diplomacy on the war in Lebanon was an example, with Haig doing his delicate diplomatic thing while the vice

Given non and its threatened "decapitation" of the Palestine Liberation Organization. History and realpolitik suggest that he was wrong, or

Ironically, during the weekend

Haig was al-ready out before that could damage him by association. But it is hard to see why either he or the

That sounds rational and belanced, but there is no reason to suppose that the Begin-Sharon government would make such a trade-off — certainly not without the proposed American military presence in Lebanon. And if such a deal could be struck, there is no more reason to suppose that Begin and Sharon would interpret its "autonomy" guarantees any more generously than they interpreted such assurance, Israel would be expected to move ahead with Palea-tinian "autonomy" on the West Bank — not autonomy as Prime Minister Begin has interpreted it

those of Camp David.

Because Begin failed — in the view of both the Carter and the Reagan administrations — to keep his Camp David pledges, Israeli settlements on the West Bank are now a powerful internal political obstacle to greater antonomy for Palestinians living there; annexation seems more likely than any significant autonomy. And wby would israel be more willing to vield on autonomy now, in the wake of its crushing military over-kill in Lebanon and its near wipe-out of Palestinian forces? Besides, if the price of a new autonomy agreement for West Bank Palestinians is the presence of American troops on Israeli borders, that price is too high. American interests would be disastrously served if American troops were used in such a way that Arab states ~ particularly Iran, Saudi Arabia and Egypt - viewed them as the direct military protectors of Israel.

If power is security, Israel may be gaining it. But that is a far cry from the kind of "new opportunity" for peace that resulted only a few years ago from Anwar Sadat's visit to Jerusalem and Menachem Begin's willingness to receive him - a lesson in the uses of reason and good will that seems to have been lost in the continuing thunder of arms and defiance.

The Democrats Get a Warning

By David S. Broder

PHILADELPHIA — When the Democrats left Philadelphia Sunday at the end of their midterm national party conference, they had achieved what Lynn Cutler of Iowa, their vice-chairman, had defined as the minimal goal. They formed the firing squad in a straight line against the Reagan policies, instead of a circle in which they aimed at each other. For a party that has been notably short on civility in recent years, it was an achievement that there were no self-inflicted wounds in the weekend of oratory and resolution-passing.

Quite a few good rhetorical shots were landed. The speaking honors went to Sen. Ted Kennedy and former Vice President Fritz Mondale. But neither of them was really able to answer the most important question about the Democrats: Are they ready to be a national party again?

Kennedy and Mondale are liberals of the old school, which is natural and safe if you come from Massachusetts or Minnesota. In those states. Ronald Reagan got less than 43 percent of the vote in 1980 and voters seem tired of the conservative governors they elected just four years ago.

But Rep. Steny Hoyer of Maryland, a shrewd politician with the border-state mentality of looking in both directions, made the pertinent observa-tion. "You can't elect a president between Massa-chusetts and Minnesota," be said. "You have to be able to move south and west as well."

That is an obvious fact of life for a party which won narrowly with a Southern candidate in 1976 and lost overwhelmingly when that Southerner, Jimmy Carter, carried nothing in Dixie but his bome state four years later.

Yet Southern accents were not prominent on the Philadelphia convenion podium. One Dixie presidential hopeful, Sen. Fritz Hollings of South Carolina, rushed through his speech as if be had a plane waiting. The other, former Gov. Reubin Askew of Florida, declined to speak at all.

(Askew's silence should not be mistaken for indifference. He is waging an intense underground campaign, reminiscent of Carter's outsider assault on the 1976 nomination. He has been in all 50 states since Jan. 1, and he and his wife will "vacation" for 10 days this summer in New Hampshire,

"just to get the geography in our heads." he says, "and learn how they pronounce the names.")

But there were a few Southern speakers, and what they said serves as a useful corrective to the current Democratic euphoria. Their message was that the voters rejected the party in 1980 for good cause and have yet to be convinced that it has recognized the errors of its ways. The electorate, said Rep. Kent Hance of Texas, 'didn't feel the Democratic Party deserved its vote in 1980." Now his constituents are asking, "Where is the Democratic alternative to Ronald Reagan and his Republicans? Why basn't the Democratic Party stepped up to the critical issues of the day with responsible alternatives?" Hance's testimony was dismissed by some as the rationalization of a man who gave Reagan big help on the 1981 tax bill. But the message was the same in the speech of Rep. James R. Jones of Oklahoma, who, as chairman of the House Budget Committee, has seen the nominal Democratic majority splinter on each key roll call. Jones argued that the Democratic Party has lost control of vital center" of politics and instead has been perceived as "the party of factions." That was also the theme of Rep. Gillis Long of Louisiana, chairman of the House Democratic Caucus. "Let us not kid ourselves," he said. "The opportunity we have today comes not because of what we have done, but because of Republican failure... The Republicans have given us a reprieve. They have embraced a program every bit as radical as anything factions of our party embraced during the 1970s." To profit from the reprieve, Long said, "we must demonstrate to the American people that the Democrane Party we ask them to vote for in 1982 is a different party than the one they voted against in 1980."

Are Democrats doing that? All the Southerners hinted that the answer is no, but Hollings said it bluntly, "On the all-important issue of the economy," he said, "the people still shy away from us." He warned: "If Democrats cannot act for the common good to put America back to work, then we will not be entrusted to lead."

Britain's Deterrent

Regarding "Britain Should Leave the Nuclear Game" (IHT. June 26): Mr. Rosenfeld thinks United Kingdom should abandon its nuclear arms because that is not bestowed by the U.S. connection. This is not the case. Britain's nuclear arsenal forces the Soviets to take one more nuclear power into account when thinking about war in Europe. This enhances Western deterrence, especially at a time when American credibility is low. Paris. ROBERT DUJARRIC.

Britain Faulted

That the Falklands war was necessary to save 1,800 British settlers from an intolerable fate is hard to believe. Between 1833 and 1982, many more thousands of Britons have settled freely on the mainland of Argentina, to live contentedly and prosperously and to become a respected part of Argentine society.

On the Malvinas issue, Argentines have always been united. The British campaign and the heavy sacrifices will bave strengthened their unity and re- ter than those in labor camps or solve in this matter, which will now remain one of high national priority for future governments. That a large part of the British public could in 1982 be carried away by nationalistic emotions and rhetoric is amazing. It is deeply disappointing to those abroad who have looked to today's Britain as a model of a civilized and sensible democracy. Jerusalem. L NOY-MEIR.

From the article on the Peking municipal prison (IHT, May 31). I see that things haven't changed at my old alma mater since I left it more than 20 years ago.

and is not now a "country club." Like any other prison or labor camp in China, its "facilities" and "welfare benefits" are intended for the single purpose of increas-ing production and accelerating the inmates' ideological reform.

The daily study sessions are in-tended to "reform" the prisoners' "bad thoughts" and incorrect ways of thinking." They can train them into skilled dialecticians: able to hold their own when arguing with wardens. During these political study sessions all are supposed to express themselves without fear of reprisals. We had nothing to fear: We were in prison already! Prisons in China are the only places left where freedom of speech is encouraged.

As for prisoners who do not leave after serving their time, this is not new. In 1954 a law was passed to oblige prisoners to stay on after their sentences were up. On our "graduation day" we all asked the authorities to let us stay on so as to make an active contribution to the building of socialism. If we didn't do so, it was proof that we hadn't reformed. J. PASQUALINI.

NEW YORK - Mayor McClellan has abandoned his weekend vacation to take command of the situation due to the strikes of the street cleaners and the ice wagon drivers, resulting in encounters between strikers and strike-breakers. Ice is scarce. Scores of employees of the Health Department, removing the heaps of garbage, the accumulation of five days, have been driven off by the strikers, but the work is now well organized, and the operators are protected by the police. Squads are saturating the garbage heaps with disinfectants pending their removal by the as yet insufficient wagon force. On the West Side the conditions are not generally offensive, on the East Side they are most obnoxious.

1932: Party Walks Wet Plank

CHICAGO - The battle cry of "beer and light wine" was tossed into the Democratie National Convention when the resolutions committee caused a sensation by bringing in a plank for outright repeal of the 18th Amendment and immediate modification of the Volstead law to permit legalization of beer and wine. The unexpected extreme wet proposal caused an uproar and the drys and moderate wets immediately announced they would bring in a minority plank calling for a referendum on repeal. Former Sen. Gilbert M. Hitchcock of Nebraska, chairman of the committee, was interrupted by a frenzied demonstration when he came to the words: "We favor repeal of the 18th Amendment."

But it is difficult to see any positive outcome to these talks unless they are tied to some broader limitation on strategic arms.

The administration soon began to notice that it had a problem at bome as well. Admiral Hyman G. Rickover, the founding father of America's nuclear navy, warned that the country was spending too much on defense, that it would probably blow up the human race and that disarmament was an urgent necessity. A congressional resolution calling for a freeze on nuclear weapons has gained considerable support, despite arguments that it would be difficult to verify and could come only after long, complicated negotiations. For a time the administration continued to resist, arguing that serious, comprehensive talks should be linked to better Soviet conduct in Poland. Afghanistan and elsewhere, as well as an improvement in the U.S. military posture. But the pressures proved too great.

'Veronika Voss' Lacks Suspense

By Thomas Quinn Curtis

PARIS — The late Rainer Werner Fassbinder's penulti-mate work, "Die Sehnsucht der Veronika Voss" (The Yearning of Veronika Voss) received the firstprize Golden Bear at the 32d Berlin festival, a jury verdict that may raise some eyebrows.

Shot in black and white to match its early 1950 setting, it is stuffy, old-time melodrama that borrows from "Sunset Boulevard" and Fritz Lang's hair-raising Dr.

Mabuse series.
Its heroine is a faded star of the German cinema trying to cope with evolution of tastes. Beset by declining popularity, advancing years and hallucinations of her glamorous past, she falls into the clutches of a pack of quacks who drug her with morphine in a sinister clinic. A journalist she chances to meet learns of the malpractice and would bring her parasite per-secutors to justice. They, alarmed, counive to finish off their distract-

Rose Zech as the withered favor-ite in no way resembles the movie queens of the quondam German movies - Mariene Dietrich. Paula Wessely, Anny Ondra or Zarah - and she is frumpishly clad. The improbable situations that arise suggest a sensational Otto Soyka thriller crossed with episodes from "The Perils of Pan-line," but the film lacks the suspense element on which such things thrive. One suspects the there is also a curious humor, now Berlin festival jury was lulled into macabre, now of schoolboyish slumber by the monotony of the glum proceedings.

The movie about vagabond youth must be excruciatingly bad to fail. Geneocally it contains the seeds of instant success. Whatever horrendous hardships it may de-scribe, il sounds a siren obbligato, voicing plaintively the insatiable yearning for youth, liberty and adventure that is irresistible, even if just another romantic illusion.

Add to earlier screen treatments of this general theme the Brazilian film "Pixote" hy Hector Babenco. Its case is that of an orphan who, revolting against the injustices in a reform school, makes his getaway with two fellow inmates and before long is in the thrall of the un-derworld, an accomplice in drug and prostitution rackets and in holdups and murders. Nearer ba-byhood than manhood, he is a defi

"Pixote" has been recommended as a tonic expose of the shocking conditions of underprivileged children in urban Brazil. The recommendation is in order, but the film is far more than a social document. From its sordid evidence, Babenco has distilled a drama of extraordinary excitement and poignancy, innocent of the slightest theatrical trickery. All that happens has an authentic ring, but the unrelenting naturalism is edged with uncommon directorial cunning.

There is much violence, but there is also a curious humor, now

Forty years after an incident in World War II, six comrades of the Class of 1943 meet for a reunion in their provincial town. One of them is now mayor of the community and he informs his friends that he has tracked down the man who be-trayed their schoolmaster to the lazis; the teacher was executed before their eyes. As capital pun-ishment has been abolished in France, the mayor has decided to take justice into his own hands.

To meet the regulation movie time schedule, Anblanc inserts long sequences of a village fete that is taking place. At the end, the informer who profited from the Nazi reward is beckoned to the town hall and the mayor takes down his rifle and shoots him dead in the town square. The story — such as it is — is told in a straightforward manner, but for his next venture Auhlanc should engage a scenarist who has something more pertinent to say.

Mortadella: Not a Bit of Baloney

WHEN I was a youngster, the sausage we are most often — except, of course, for the frankfurter — was baloney, alias balony or boloney and, for the erudite, bologna. It was not a food that im-pressed itself indelibly on the memory, though it served the lazy as an easily applied component of sandwiches in which, like its frequent companion in the same role, deviled ham, it assumed the task of representing meat at picnics, though without much conviction that it was succeeding.

This was the only sort of baloncy of which I was conscious in New England early in this century, though it appears that there was, in Pennsylvania Dutch country, a succeed with more character, as sausage with more character re-ferred to as "Lebanon-style bologna" — meaning, of course, Leba-non, Pennsylvania, not the Middle Eastern country. Calling it bolo-gna was close to libel, for the Lebanon sausage, or summer sausage, was eminently qualified to represent meat much exposed to baloney during his upbringing, for he is credited in the reference books with having originated the only two phrases known to me that have enshrined baloney in folk speech; and I judge that it was the same rather tired baloney, for neither of his references to it sounds particularly complimentary.

According to the Oxford Dictionary of Quotations, Gov. Smith, when invited to lay the cornerstone of the New York State Office Building, answered, "Nothing doing. That's just baloncy. Every-body knows I can't lay bricks," It is obvious that he did not invent is obvious that he did not invent the expression, for he expected everybody to understand it.

The other example appears in Bartlett's Familiar Quotations, attributed to a 1936 campaign speech: "No matter how thin you slice it, it's still baloney." (I think it runs more trippingly off the tougue in the more familiar form, "No matter how thin you slice it. "No matter how thin you slice it, it's baloney all the same.") Smith was on this occasion referring to the rhetoric of Franklin D. Roosevelt: Claire Booth Luce later expanded the scope of the word by coming "globaloney." A rhyming derivative, inevitable if tantologi-cal, produced "phony-baloney," which Damon Runyon rendered into mock-Latin as "phonus-bo-

"Baloney" as a corruption of "bologna" recognizes that the American sausage is an imitation of mortadella, the most famous sausage of those produced in Ita-ly's Bologna. Mortadella is a very old creation and Bologna is a very old sausage-making center. Tradi-tion has it that the ancient Romans first learned about sausage from the Gauls, and that the tribe that had the earliest opportumity to instruct them was the Boil. Invading Italy, they drove the Etruscans out of Felsina, which was renamed, apparently from them, Bonia; it is Bologna today. In 190 B.C. the Romans took the city and acquired sausages, after one year's enjoyment of them, they adopted the region as a colony. The Bologna region has had the reputation of being the most prol-ific sausage-making area of Italy

A great deal of mediocre sausage is misleadingly referred to as mortadella, but as made in Bolo-gna, mortadella is one of the great sausages of the world, which well deserves the accolade accorded it in 1661 by Ovidio Montalbani, a doctor and a gournet, who called it 'the poblest of all pork products.' Many other experts, before and since, have agreed. A dissenting opinion was ex-pressed by Anatole France, who found moriadella unpleasant in taste and indigestible for the stom-ach; "but he had with him, during his visit to Bologna," wrote Alessandro Cervellati, "his tyrannical friend, Madame Caillavet, which was certainly no help to the diges-tion." The French Dictionnaire de l'Academie des Gastronomes says, "Mortadella has a pleasant taste, but, being made of two kinds of meat, both distinctive, it does not have a clearly defined flavor."

This criticism is based on a mi taken conception of the nature of mortadella. The dictionnaire demortadetta. The included of mixed pork and beef, plus lard to reduce dryness, which is first pickled and then smoked. This may be the way the French make their imitation of this sausage, but the genuine Bolo-gna mortadella is made of pork alone; it is neither pickled nor Actually, mortadella is made of mashed pork, kneaded well together, skillfully spiced, and packed tightly into sausage casings. Sometimes the casing is the skin of a whole sucking pig, into which the meat is stuffed with such artistry that no invision is visible. This that no incision is visible. This trick was known to the ancient Romans, and some authorities are of the opinion that mortadella was first made by them and has been manufactured continuously since a theory that they buttress by another concerning the origin of its name. They point out that the Romans made a sausage called murtata because it was flavored with myrle berries, mortale in modern Italian — hence mortadel-la. The trouble with this theory is that it is not myrtle berries that provide the spiciness of mortadel-la, but whole peppercorns, and these are so much the indispensible mark of mortadella that its heavy peppering is recorded even in the 15th century, when pepper was so precious that it was used as money.

The ancient Romans apparently did make a sausage that was a pre-cursor of mortadella, but it disappeared from public view with the fall of the empire. It either took refuge in the monasteries or was reinvented there.

Pasty, Lacking Bite Elizabeth David writes in "Italian Food": "In Bologna there is good mortadella to be found, but on the whole it is a pasty sausage lacking the bite and stimulating character of the raw salt-cured salame." I am saddened to discover that David, an anthority with whom it is difficult to disagree, does not much care for mortadella. "As an ingredient of various stuffings and little pastries, it is useful," she says, "but as an hors d'ocuvre frankly dull." I would say bland, not dull (apart from the pepper-corns), and it has to be bland to allow the delicacy of its seasoning to be perceived.

Delicacy is difficult to achieve: t may be that David has been unlucky in the samples of mortadella she has encountered. She might be if, for instance, she met American mortadella, which does not sound particularly subtle as defined by Webster's: "made of chopped beef. pork, and pork fat, seasoned with pepper and garlic, stuffed into large casings, cooked and smoked." The same source's definition of beloney is "a large moist sausage, usu, of beef, veal and pork, that is chopped line, seasoned, boiled, and smoked red." It is perhaps because this mix-ture of meats causes them to cancel out each other's flavors that I and, at its worst, recalling soap in texture. In soap, tastelessness is a

New Royal Ballet 'Orpheus'

Is a Showcase for Eurydice

By Noel Goodwin national Herald Tribune

ONDON --- As the Royal Ballet's tribute to the Igor Stra-vinsky centennial, Kemeth Mac-Millan has choreographed a new "Orpheus" for a Stravinsky triple bill at Covent Garden. In seven short, linked scenes, it follows the traditional story of Orpheus' attempt to rescue Eurydice from Hades, ending with his death at the hands of the Furies but showing an apotheosis of Apollo raising the lyre of Orpheus to the heavens.

Most of these incidents are, as it were, written into Stravinsky's mu-sic, which was composed for George Balanchine and what is now the New York City Ballet. That company has kept the Balanchine ballet in its repertory since the 1948 premiere, and it was still to be seen and admired in the company's recent Stravinsky festival in New York, where, I found, older Comparisons are inevitable.

MacMillan's version has more elaborate detail but less compelling choreography. His designer, Nicholas Georgiadis, provides cos-tumes and headdresses in stylized Greek manner, as well as high metal ladders shining against black drapes to suggest the pit of hell, but these are not so striking as the sculptured simplicity of Isamu Noguchi's wonderful New York designs, which have kept their effect after more than 30 years.

Role Extended An advantage of MacMillan's version is a more extended role for Eurydice, who is seen being turn-bled into Hades over the backs of other "lost souls." She dances a strangely cheerful solo before being restored to a blindfolded Orpheus for their short duet, which is surprisingly allowed to continue briefly even after he has torn off the blindfold, though their contact is oddly passionless.

At the performance I saw, Marguerite Porter brought grace of line as well as poignancy of character to Eurydice. Wayne Eagling was a strongly focused Orpheus, but the role's emotional feeling seems added to his dancing rather than expressed through it. His soul is supposedly contested by a dark speel posedly contested by a dark angel (Phillip Broomhead) and the angel of light (Stephen Beagley), but they seem less actively concerned with Orpheus then with each other. The Furies are energetic but not particularly aggressive in the steps they are given, and Apollo is very much at odds with the rest in having stiff-legged, robot movements that belong more to the world of dolls than derites. ## Alaska Gas Pipeline Goes Nowhere Slowly

By Wallace Turner New York Tones Service

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — For almost five years, advocates of a pipeline to carry Prudhoe Bay natural gas into the lower 48 states have been frustrated in their attempts to put together a package of financing for the mulobillion-dollar project.

But strong political and business forces have begun exploring other routes to bring the gas to market.

As authorized, the pipeline would run south from Prudhoe Bay parallel to the Alaskan oil pipeline to Fairbanks, then east to the Canadian border. There it would join a Canadian-built pipeline paralleling the Alaska highway to the U.S. border, where one branch would head east to serve the upper Middle West and another west to the three Parific Coast states. the three Pacific Coast states.

With support apparently fading for the Alaska highway route through Canada, Gov. Jay Hammond has named a committee to study alternaove routes. Former governors Walter J. Hickel and William P. State and William P. State

Mr. Hickel recently told associates it might be necessary to shift from the Alaska highway route to one that would parallel the Trans-Alaska Pipeline all the way from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez, a distance of 800 miles, or to deliver gas to existing facilities on the Kenai

Peninsula, west of Anchorage.

Either alternative would be shorter, through less difficult territory and much less expensive than the authorized route At Fairbanks, meanwhile, the suspicion grows that the gas pipeline may never be built.

In 1976, a U.S. law was passed to expedite the gas line, and in 1977

President Carter picked a consortium of investors for the job. The word then was that construction would begin in 1981 and the line would be in use in 1985. A U.S. pipeline inspector's office, created especially to supervise and expedite the Alaska gas line, was opened in July, 1979. The state pipeline inspector's office, opened during construction of the oil pipeline, was kept open and shifted to helping with the gas-line plan-

Bot things have oot moved forward as expected. Although about $660 million has been spent getting ready to build the pipeline, and its backers insist they will build it, Alaskan Northwest Natural Gas

Transportation Co., the consortium formed by the Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Co. of Salt Lake City, has been unable to put together the financing for the 741-mile segment within Alaska.

First, the expected completion date was pushed back to 1987. In April, the date was pushed back again to 1989. The reasons given were the short-term excess in the world energy supply, depressed crude oil prices, lower levels of economic activity in the United States and abroad, and uncertainties in financial markets.

Now the Alaska pipeline inspector's office here is being dismantled and the staff dispersed. The Fairbanks staff of Northwest Alaskan (Continued on Page 11, Col. 2)

Swiss Banks Agree On Tighter Code

Rules on Identification, Fund Shifts Aim to Curb Abuses of Secrecy Law

General of the Swiss National Bank and the Swiss Bankers Association have agreed on a new tightened code of conduct to fight improper use of the Swiss bank secrecy law, they announced Tuesday.

The new code is designed to re-

The new code is designed to renew and strengthen an expiring agreement reached in 1977 that is aimed at combating economic crime and controlling the flight of capital into Switzerland.

It continues to forbid banks actively to assist flight of capital or tax evasion. But for the first time it menoons specificially so-called compensation transactions, whereby capital is moved by bookkeeping adjustments in two different countries, rather than by physical transfer of funds.

The oew agreement also applies the rules to Swiss lawyers, ootaries and members of fiduciary and anditing associations, the gobetweens who can invoke profes-sional secrecy in testifying about the true beneficiary of funds without revealing the latter's idenoty.

A key clause in the new five-year agreement, which is to take effect Oct. I, requires banks to identify clients more rigorously to make the "laundering" of crime-connect-ed money more difficult. Ransom paid in kidnappings in Italy and other West European couotries has been traced repeatedly to Switzer-

Idenoty checks will be required more than 500,000 Swiss francs ($235,000). Up to now cash clients were allowed to remain anonymous. The National Bank had hoped for a "somewhat lower ceiling," a spokesman said, but feared that it might make transactions "too complicated."

The new code also extends idenoty controls to all clients opening accounts or making deposits of securities. Uoder the 1977 agreement, new customers depositing less than 100,000 franes were ex-

The code does not affect the bank's obligations under the 48-year-old banking secrecy law to guarantee absolute confidentiality, except in criminal investigations.

A moderate change of those rules is under consideration by government specialists, under some political pressure: The Social Democrats have proposed consti-tutional amendments that, for the first time, would oblige banks to provide internal revenue authorities with tax information on client accounts. The proposal is to be voted on in a oatioowide referendum, probably in 1984.

Banks remain pledged not to support attempts "aimed at deceiving fiscal authorities at home or abroad" by incomplete or othervise misleading information.

The new code leaves at 10 mil-

A spokesman for the committee said that seven banks have been fined a total of less than 1 millioo francs in the past five years.

Dollar Falters In Stow Trading At Quarter-End

Complete by Ow Staff From Dispatches

LONDON — The dollar fell against most major European currencies in slow trading Tuesday, reflecting some profit-taking and an easing in Eurodollar deposit rates, dealers said. Gold and silver bullion rose.

Enrodollar sates ended about 7/16 lower as pressures stemmoing from the end of the quarter began to abate, the dealers said. They said a number of traders were buying back European currencies Tuesday after heavy dollar demand the day before to balance their books.

The British pound, buoyed by the end of rail and subway strikes, regained ground lost Monday, to close at $1.734, up from Monday's $1.72.

The dollar also slipped against the Deutsche mark, closing at 2.4615 DM after Monday's 2.4893. The disclosure that West Germany's trade surplus had widened to about 5 billion DM in May from 3.4 billion DM in April had been expected but still seemed to benefit the mark, dealers said.

Alaska Gas Pipe Plan Bogs Down

(Continued from Page 9) Pipeline, once about 120, is down to 24. The only gas-line work being carried out in Alaska consists of further tests of means to contain damage caused by ground shifting from the the permafrost that occurs all along the line's route north of the Arctic Circle.

Harold Moles, Northwest Alaskan Pipeline's manager here, said the closing of the state pipeline inspector's office will oot have much effect because of the level of activity here." He added that pre-construction field programs were all completed, and design work was being done in Irvine, Calif., and in Houston.

Charles Behike, director of the state pipeline inspection office, said Northwest Alaskan Pipeline had shut off the $2.5 million annual subsidy it paid to keep the office open to expedite construction. The closure doesn't mean much as long as the focus is on financial matters," be added.

Of the three major permits the pipeline needs, one is in hand and the need for another is in dispute. but the third one is out of reach until a financing plan can be shown to U.S. officials,

In the last days of the Carter administration, a right-of-way permit was issued for U.S. lands. The pipeline company and state offi-cials are in dispute over the right-of-way permit for state lands, and one has oot been issued.

This question involves the current transfers of millions of acres of land from the U.S. public domaio to state ownership. The pipeline builders argue that their U.S. permit covers such land, if it was in U.S. title when the U.S. night-of-way permit was issued; state officials argue the other point

But the most important permit is the certificate of necessity and public coovenience from the feder-al Energy Regulatory Commission. To get that, the pipeline must submit information, go through hear-ings that will take two years and present an acceptable financing

W. Germany Says Surplus Up for May

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatcher WIESBADEN, West Germany -West Germany recorded a trade surplus of 5 billion Deutsche marks and a current-account surplus of 800 million DM in May, the federal statistics office said

The Economics Ministry said that the improvement in the current account supports the government's forecast that it should be roughly in balance this year.

The statistics office said the current account for the first five months of 1982 showed a deficit of 600 million DM compared with an 11.5 billion DM deficit for the same period in 1981.

A spokesman for the West German Industrial and Trade Association said the figures were in line with expectations. A statistics office spokesman said the current account surplus for April was revised to 500 million DM from the 200 million DM announced earlier. The April trade surplus was 3.44 billion DM.

In May, 1981, there was a current account deficit of 2.1 billion

DM, the spokesman said.

Exports last month totaled 35.58

the spokesman added. Exports in the first five months of this year totaled 179.7 billion

Fed Decreases to 2 Days the Lag For Banks' Reserve Accounting

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve Board, in an attempt to improve short-term control of the money supply, has decided to clim-mate most of the two-week lag between the time a financial institution receives a deposit and the time it must place a portion of it with the Fed as a reserve.

Some Reagan administration of-ficials, including Treasury Secre-tary Donald T. Regan, have been pressing the Fed to shift from the present lagged reserve accounting approach to so-called contempo-raneous reserve accounting. The officials and most monetarist economists maintain the switch will greatly improve the Fed's ability to hit its money supply targets on a month-to-month or quarter-to-quarter basis.

Mr. Regan, who called Monday's action "welcome news," has blamed the Fed's inability to conurol money growth month-by-month for causing the current re-

The action was approved informally Monday. The Fed must still act formally on it.

None of the five Fed governors, including Chairman Paul A. Volcker, who voted for the change, claimed it would provide more than a small improvement in money control. Two governors, Lyle E. Gramley and Nancy H. Teeters, opposed the change on the grounds it would increase the volatility of interest rates and would be costly for financial institutions, The action, which still has many important details to be worked out, including the date of imple-mentation, was approved over the nearly unanimous opposition of about 160 depository institutions. They commented on a staff pro-posal to make the change. The banks and thrift institutions argued the costs they would incur to collect oecessary information about deposits more quickly would not be worth it in terms of better control of money.

Citibank, for example, said it supported the move "philosophically" but agreed with the view of the New York Clearing House that some banks would have difficulty in shortening to two days their response time to deposit shifts.

As with most aspects of mone-tary policy implementation, the nature and timing of reserve re-quirements is n highly technical matter. A financial institution that accepts deposits must set aside a portion of them in the form of a non-interest bearing deposit at a Federal Reserve bank Institutions with more than $26 million in checking, or transactions accounts, must deposit 12 percent of such liabilities with the Fed. At present, the institutions keep track of their deposits for each seven-day period ending on Wednesday. They are not required to set aside the reserves associated with those deposits until a comparable The proposal adopted Monday would lengthen from one week to two weeks the period in which de-posits are counted. Each deposit period would end on Monday, and there would be only a two-day lag. uotil Wednesday, before the associated reserve accounting period ended. Thus, most of the 14 days over which deposits and required reserves are averaged would over-

Eliminating the lag, at least m theory, will encourage the banking system to respond more quickly to the week-to-week actions by the Fed through which it seeks to regu-late growth of the money supply by adding and subtracting reserves from the system.

Opponents and supporters of Monday's more expect greater vo-latility in the market for overnight

H. Erich Heinemann of Morgan Stanley, a monetarist economist and a supporter of the Fed deci-sion, said Tuesday: "In the very short-term market, the federal funds market, it will probably increase volatility. But if it is proper-ly implemented, it will probably volatility in long-term Excellence is achieved only through consistency and innovation.

And teamwork.

Excellence, in any endeavour, is based on superior performance, day in and day out. And continued success is achieved only when like-minded professionals combine their experience and ingenuity in such a manner as to set them apart.

It is an accomplishment which requires common purpose sparked with rare determination. A drive that provides the ability to perform consistently under pressure. Teamwork. These are parts of a real-life philosophy. A philosophy which yields handsome rewards.

Common purpose and teamwork: how they work for you.

A major construction and engineering firm recently worked with Bankers Trust to evaluate the advantages of refinancing part of its revolving bank credit in a special way. What they needed was a creative finance package that gave them the flexibility to gain access to a range of money markets at the most advantageous interest rates possible.

Working closely with our Corporate Financial Services professionals and our World Corporate bankers, Bankers Trust's Resources Management specialists structured and placed an issue of privately placed promissory notes.

Subsequently, the company appointed Bankers Trust as co-agent in its traditional commercial paper programme. The two financings, which totalled hundreds of millions of dollars, met the needs of a customer with unusually high standards Highly skilled people from Bankers Trust's worldwide service network were brought together to work as one, carefully guided by one of our experienced relationship managers. Someone who never forgets the awesome potential of people working diligently toward a common purpose. People inspired by the pursuit of excellence.

This is just one example of the kind of performance into which our philosophy translates. Performance which makes Bankers Trust stand out in our industry. And the kind of performance which helps make our clients first in theirs.

This man is an experienced Banco do Brasil manager. And because he is, he knows Brazil better than anybody else. That's why he's the man you should consult for the best deals and investments Brazil has to offer.

Today's Brazil, a giant,
rapidly-developing market, is already one of the ten most heavily-industrialized nations in the West.

in the West.
Living in 8.5 million square kilometers of national territory is a population of 120 million... over half under 20 years of age.
Clearly a nation as dynamic as this with a growth rate of 8.9 percent a year in the last decade, requires a bank extraordinary development. Such a bank is Banco do Brasil, the main financial agent of the Brazilian nation. Banco do Brasil offers a consummate array of hanking services to better orient foreign husinessmen in their commercial transactions and provide financing for the importation of Brazilian goods. To this end, Banco do Brasil provides 2,000 banking agencies within Brazil plus an extensive network of offices and branches abroad, covering the world's key financial centers. We're here to help you with information covering any and all of Brazil's main exports:

that can keep pace with its modern aircraft, quality shoes, household appliances, textiles, medical-hospital equipment, diverse technology... and much more.

Want a good deal on your Brazilian investment? Look for the man with the Banco do Brasil emblem in his lapel. He knows what it's all about.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS

By Jimmy Breslin. 431 pp. $16.95. Simon & Schuster, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 10020

Reviewed by Michiko Kakutani

TIMMY BRESLIN'S latest novel, "Forsaking All Others" is really two stories, braided together in a fast-paced, almost cinematic narrative. The first, about the rise and fall of Teen-Ager, one of the meanest, richest drug dealers in the South Bronx, makes the most of Breslin's streetsmart knowledge of the city and his swaggering, tough-guy way with language. It is expertly, knowingly told. The second story, which takes the old Romeo-and-Juliet formula one step beyond "West Side Story," fails to clicit our concern. Its curious mixtures of conjecture and continentality under of cynicism and sentimentality under-mines itself, for we are hardly able to like its two protagonists, Nicki and Maximo, much less care about their fates.

The daughter of a Mafia don who controls the Bronx drug trade from his home in suburban New Jersey, Nicki is the pretty young wife of an-other Malia functionary, currently serving time in jail. Although we initially sympathize with her plight ---her entrapment in a family that expected her only to marry, be loyal and bear lots of children — her willful prejudice and selfish materialism soon divest her of any charm. When she is not cooking lasagna and chicken scar-pariello for the men in her family, she is buying herself designer clothes at Saks, and she seems to value her hus-band most for the diamonds and cars he buys her.

Maximo, her Puerto Rican lover, is a more admirable sort, but, in the end, just as unconvincing. Having graduated in the top tenth of his class from Harvard Law School, he returns to the Bronx, where he grew up and now divides his time between downtown bar review classes and uptown bar-hopping with such drug-dealer friends as Teen-Ager. Apparently watching his buddies sell heroin, murder rival pushers and cheat on their mistresses and wives hasn't tarmished Maximo's Ivy League idealism. He applies for work at the Bronx Legal Aid Society, the New York State Substance Abuse Center and the New York City De-partment of Buildings.

While we are asked, even by the maudlin title of the novel, to think of the affair between Maximo and Nicki in high romantic terms, their passion seems rooted in little except sex more specifically, in sex based on the allure of the forbidden. Maximo, Breslin writes, "had something that excited him and attracted all his sexual energy, a white girl, and better than just any white girl, the most distant of all white girls, an Italian girl." And while Nicki was certain "in the dark-ness of bed, that he was the finest thing the jungle ever had produced," her affection for Maximo never seems to transcend her prejudice. She asks him, "Can someone like you, even if you have thin lips, have a nigger baby?" and later declares, "You're a Spic and you'll always be a Spic."

This is true love?

To complicate matters, Maximo's childhood friend, Teen-Ager, just happens to be engaged in a bloody war for control of drug traffic in the South Bronx with Nicki's father. It is in telling this story, which is also the story of the Bronx and its shifting eth profile, that Breslin hits his stride. Dropping in the same sort of sociological sketches that he used in his first novel, "The Gang That Couldn't Shoot Straight," he shows how an immigrant proving-ground became the living. In doing this, he manages to create a convincing world, delineating in quick strokes of naturalism what life is like amid the burned-out lots and is like amid the burned-out fots and after-hours joints of the South Broux. We learn that a small apartment in this ravaged neighborhood goes for $212.50 a month; that Puerto Rican dealers like Teen-Ager favor Mercedes Benzes, while their Italian counterparts opt for Lincoln Continentals or Cadillacs; that the Dobermans trained to stand guard over drug. mans trained to stand guard over drug shipments have had their voice boxes removed so that they can attack silently and without warning.

There are also sharply drawn cameos of minor characters who, like the subjects of Breslin's columns, invest the cold statistics of the war on vest the cold statistics of the war on crime with a measure of humanity: Myles, a cop struggling to support his family on a patrolman's wages, hopes that a big drug bust will boost him to the rank of detective; Turin, a nightclub owner, unwittingly unleashes a gang war when he takes to spying on his mistress; and 14-year-old Francisca comes to New York from Puerto Rico in hopes of attendfrom Puerto Rico in hopes of attending a better high school and ends up delivering heroin to customers. Al-though they never sufficiently distract us from the irritating story of Maximo and Nicki, such subsidiary characters, combined with Breslin's roving eye for detail, create a composite portrait of how New York works, or doesn't work, from the point of view of those who are disenfranchised.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

THE diagrammed deal was highly unusual in one respect. When it was over, the players could not agree how it should have been played. A series of experts, confronted with the problem, offered a series of different solutions and the series of different solutions, and they still cannot agree which one of them is right. The reader may care to cover the East-West hands and see how many plausible plans he can form, playing six hearts after the opening lead of the diamond

North and South were using a so-phisticated relay system. North made a series of artificial inquiries, and a series of armicial inquiries, and South described his hand according to a predetermined plan. When the bidding was over, North was able to describe the South hand accurately: a minimum opening, 1-7-1-4 distribu-tion, the ace-queen of hearts, the club ace, and nothing else higher than a

This accuracy was helpful to the defense, but it will often work the other way round: The hand described may turn out to be the dummy, in which case the closed hand is unknown and the defense is difficult.

the defense is difficult.

In practice, South put up the diamond ace, cashed the spade ace and led the queen. East covered for no very good reason, and South ruffed. He then cashed the heart ace and led to the king, hoping for an even split. When this failed, be had to play spades and try to discard clubs. This would have worked if West had begun with four spades, but, as it was, the result was down one.

In the post-mortem, North suggest-ed an improvement that would have worked as the cards lie: At the fourth trick, finesse the heart ten and, if it wins, play spades. If the finesse loses, the contract will still succeed — if the major suits both break evenly. Other experts had completely different ideas. One wanted to duck a club after the spade king appeared, aiming for a club ruff. Another wanted to take the diamond ace and duck a club immediately, preparing for a ruff with various squeeze chances in reserve. Yet another wanted to finesse the diamond grape for it this failed in the diamond queen, for if this failed it would still have been possible to work on spades. And the final plan was to take the diamond ace, ruff a diamond and finesse the spade queen.

Exactly which of these plans is best would take hours of mathematical effort to determine, with some psychological factors complicating the issue. The only certainty is that South's line was not the best, either theoretically or practically. If he had made the slam, his team would have placed second and been within a hairbreath of tying for the top honors.

West Germans Critical Of 1-0 Qualifier Match

By John Vinocur New York Times Service

BONN, West Germany - In 1954, West Germany won soccer's World Cap. In the intervening years more than a few talk-show sociologists and op-ed page instant historians cited the event as an important one in rebuilding West German self-respect and self-confidence after World War II.

This month, everything is different. "Shame On You," the head-ine read, in letters as high as beer glasses, on Page 1 of the country's oiggest oewspaper.

What happened was that the players on the national team in the World Cup in Spain got into a suspicious qualifying match with Ausa last Friday, and many Germans felt the team had betrayed the nation's honor and reputation.

The story of the match, won, I-0, by West Germany, was simple: ft was as if both teams had signed a nonaggression pact in order to make sure they would eliminate Algeria and advance to the next round. Following the first 20 minutes of play, two sides just passed the ball back and forth.

The fury of the reaction was extraordinary. Newspapers in West Germany were angry, but the rest of the European press was brutal. El Pais, Spain's most respected newspaper, said the Germans and Austrians showed themselves to be people without self-respect or hon-or. The Sun, with the largest circu-latinn among British dailies, wrote "Kick Out The Krauts."

for Volkskrant of the Netherlands, it was "Soccer Porno." The anger has several explana-tions. Soccer is the only truly oa-tional sport in West Germany, and most of the time it is played remarkably well. The country's professional teams are tough and exciting. The sport is followed pas-sionately; anything harming it is treated with contempt.

The players are well paid. If they don't play their best, they are in effect thumbing their noses at their fans. But in the match against Austria, followed around the world on television, the editorialists said the players were cootemp-tuous of everyone. Worse than that for some West German commentators were the attempts to justify the do-nothing style. After an official protest by Algeria was rejected by soccer's international authorities, the players and managers said they had to think of themselves and not of the fans or reputations. What they really had on their minds, wrote the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, was their own profit. "As shattering as the shameful speciacle between Germany and Austria was," said the newspaper, "even more borrifying was the background of naive incomprehension on the team about all the upset, the gap between two worlds, the shrunken or vanished feeling for old-fashioued notions like seriousness and honor."

And Welt Am Sonntag focused on what the rest the world was saying about the Germans. Its commentary was titled "The 'Ugly Germans' Are Back."

Bedtime for Midas

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — When I was poor I used to sit on tenement steps on steamy summer nights and envy the rich who went to the mountains or the seasbore. How little I knew. I didn't know in those days about summer bedding. Then one year I became rich enough to rent a cabin in the mountains for two weeks. The vertisement hadn't mentioned that the mattresses were all stuffed with dried corn husks. Next year it was two weeks at

Baker the ocean in a picturesque wharf apartment with the tide lapping in and out just a few feet below the bed. "Fall asleep to the gentle murmur of the waves lapping against our historic old wharf pilings." the ad said. No reference at all to the fact that when you crawled under the eiderdown at midnight the sheets would be beaded with moisture. That was the summer I woke every morning to shave and found that during the night I'd grown moss instead of whiskers. The following year I was so rich

I could afford an unfinished hut in Canada for the eoure family. The landlady lived in the next woods. The second day there I blazed a trail through to her house to complain that the mattresses were stuffed with dried corn cohs.

Returning with me to the hot, she demonstrated that what lelt like corn cobs were nothing more than broken springs that were working their way through a per-fectly good mattress stuffed with pine cones. "Put a rug over the mattress and you won't even feel the springs," she said. After that I gave up summer places for a few years. "Daddy's saving up so one of these days we'll be rich enough to rent a summer house in a charming old New England town and get a good night's sleep," I explained. That glorious summer finally dawned. The house was superb. All day we sat in it gloating over movie tycoons and Wall Street summer nights and eovy the rich. I wizards who would never vacation in such splendor. And so to bed.

summer bedding told me exactly how the beds in that house had been made. The trick is to pile a dozen blacksmith's anvils down the middle of the mattress and leave them there for 20 years. Then you remove the anvils and the bed is ready for vacation housing. The aim is to produce a double bed in which two people asleep will keep colliding with each other in the center like logs rolling down opposite sides of a ravine. After each collision, both people wake, grope for the sides of the bed, haul themselves out of the valley and cling to the edge until they go back to sleep and tumble down again. The purpose of this bed is to make vacationers happy to see the dawn. By discouraging late-morning snoozing, the host town is assured that tourisis will be waiting en masse to spend money as soon as the shops open.

I've encountered summer beds built in 1870, a time wheo Americans were a lot shorter than they are today. In these beds, the mattress is always boxed rigidly between unhudging tons of ornately carved headboards and foot-boards. If you're longer than 5 feet 8 inches and try to lie straight, you spend the night pressing your skull against the headboard and stubbing your toes on carved cherubs.

The most puzzling summer bedding dates from 1907. It is always the same: a flimsy cotton mattress, which a cat used hadly in 1919, laid on a matting of exposed springs. The springs are collapsed at one end of the bed, forcing you to decide whether you want to sleep with feet or head elevated. I always used to go for the feet-up position, reasoning that since the feet point down all day, it's only fair to give the head a chance to explore the nether side of things. It was a bed like this that finally cured me of summer-vacation rentals. After 10 nights. I began waking mornings feeling sluggish and witless. My feet seemed to know the right moves, but mentally I couldn't get organized.

I put it down to the ravages of age until a child suggested that, be-cause of the bed I was using, all my brains were going slowly to my feet. When I was poor and used to sit oo tenemeot steps oo steamy never had problems like that. New York Times Service

Hawaii's 'Rockefeller'

'Money Is Only a Game. You Use It to Prove Something

To Yourself,' Says Chinn Ho, Who Has Lots of It

By Al Marrinez

Los Angeles Times Service

HONOLULU — Chinn Ho is never without a cigar. He wields it like a scepter of capitalism, hlended from the finest tobaccos of Wall Street and Waikiki.
Squinting through the smoke, he talks hig money with the ease of a man who has it.

"I can live comfortably on $250,000 a year," he said, smiling slightly. "A man doesn't need much more." It is meant as a joke, the whimsy of the rich. But humor hides an abundance of truths.

First, $250,000 is clearly no awesome sum in the life of the man they call the Chinese Rockefeller of Hawaii. By his own estimate, he has bought and sold close to a hillion dollars worth of real estate in the past 50 years, and even among the wealthy be is considered one of the golden people. Second, Chinn Ho came to his riches over a long road that began in a bean field.

so he is not all that impressed by the size of his bank account.

"Time levels," he observed casually, "Time levels," he observed casually, "and we are all in its path. I was born in the year of the dragon and the month of the dragon. That is considered very good luck." He lit his cigar slowly, It is a ritual that buys a moment, letting a deal or decision float in limbo, clouding tomorrow in smoke.

'Magic, You Think?'

"A palmist told me I would do all right," he said, studying the tip of his cigar. "I don't believe in fortune tellers — but I've done all right." A puff of smoke. "Magic, you think?"

Chinn Ho is 78. More than a rich man, he is a legend in Hawaii, where wealth oot necessarily is equated with importance. One of the state's first Chinese millionaires, he has a casual, unscheduled manner that masks what the islanders call a kai mimiki, a tidal-wave drive.

James Michener used Ho as the proto-type for Hong Kong Wee, the wily money changer in his book "Hawaii,"

Detractors call him an old pirate, which Ho finds amusing, but they say it with respect — and out of his earshot. Even the environmentalists who battled him oo a Diamond Head project (and beat him) and on the development of Makaha Valley (and lost) admit that he fits no mold.

Because he is both Chinese and native Hawaiian, they cannot dismiss him as a white carpetbagger. They also admit that he is not unaware of the need to preserve open land as he huilds. They cannot hate him as a rapist of the outdoors,

His allegiances are shadowy at best. Frowned upon by Hawaii's "Big Five," historie corporate partners in power and money, he is also viewed askance hy edgy liber-

Ho huilt the first high-rise on Waikiki, hut he has no desire to see the muddle pro-liferate on other beaches. He restores a sacred temple with the same joy that he closes a land deal. Ho is not unaware of the dichotomies in

"I am oot a religious man," he said, walking through a glade where wild peacocks live, "but sometimes I go to a mountaintop and ask, 'Mr. Ho, how will they remember you?' "He strolled up a gra-veled pathway at Makaha Valley, a lush, beautiful place of mangoes and eccount palms, 45 minutes from downtown Honolu-

"You have to remember," he said, pausing to catch his hreath, "that money is only a game. You use it to prove something to yourself." He looked off toward 9,000 acres f valley at the foot of the Waianae Range. He still owns most of that land. There are already condominiums on it and a hotel.

More will come. "I don't spend a lot on food and cars. Money doesn't mean that much." He paused, then added, "As long as you have

Having and getting it are what the game is all about — risking, daring gambling, operating on what Ho calls "faith and credit" to buy a valley or build a city.

It is how be built the Ilikai, the Waikiki high-rise hotel, in 1962 for $18 million, ig-ooring the skeptics who said he'd never full it. It is also how he hought the Honolulu Star-Bulletin, a piece of a hotel in China, an office huilding in Hong Kong, two buildings in downtown Honolulu.

This is the most beautiful valley on the island," he said continuing up the path in Makaha toward a temple, the Kane Aki Hejau, once a Hawaiian shrine. A wild peacock strutted by flashing brilliant blues and golds as though on cue to underscore Ho's description.

Tuture Money

But in the distance, through the palms, one can also glimpse his 20-story condominiums, jarringly boxlike against the ereen mountains.

"I am concerned about future land, but I am also concerned about future money. I have the corporation to think of."

Makaha Valley, a failed sugar plantation be bought for $1.25 million and whose worth is oow estimated at $25 million, has not been easy mocey, Ho said. When he closed the deal, be added, the Big Five, jealous of his good fortune, spread a rumor that there was no water on the land. "No water on a sugar plantation?" Ho asked, years ago; he is chairman of the board.

with slightly raised eyebrows. He proved the big boys wrong by drilling wells, but the effects of the rumor persisted and development was slow.

Then an army of environmentalists, who had fought off his proposed condominium project near Diamond Head, stepped in.

"The trouble with those people is, when you give them a little say, they want 80-percent say." He shrugged. "But I don't mind a good fight." The environmentalists lost. Ho built a hotel, two golf courses, the

He reached the temple, the sacred place, and made a sweeping gesture with one

"Look," he said, on the edge of irony, "no condos."

It was Time magazine that first called him the Chinese Rockefeller of Hawaii. "I guess it is because the way I do things. I'm different," he said at the office of Capital Investments, a corporation he founded 40

One of six children, Ho turned to making money early, selling beans for I5 cents a beg as a child. His father raised ducks and fish to supplement his income as a clerk. Ho hates ducks and fish.

"I wasn't a bright kid. Average, but ambitious." He sold pennants and pencils in high school for $150 a month, then began buying penny stocks with the money he'd "I discovered that if you bought something for 15 cents and it went up 10 cents, thing for 15 cents and it went up 10 cents, that was almost doubled. That was good."

A small man with short white hair and silver-rimmed glasses, Ho does not stand out in a crowd. He is soft-spoken and hesitant. His life abounds in figures: Amounts has said for previous exprises which he he paid for various projects, which he discusses freely. Income from his proper-ties. Acreage he has bought and sold.

Even prejudice toward Orientals — which he would rather not talk about — is, momentarily, reduced to statistical terms: "From 100 percent bigotry to 5 percent. That's not bad."

Litter on Mt. Everest Upsets Edmund Hillary

Sir Edmand Hillary, who in 1953 became the first man to reach the top of Mount Everest, says be's no longer intrigued by feats of daring longer intrigued by feats of daring.
Now it's the environment that fires his imagination. "We can make the world a paradise for all or a barren world spinning endlessly in space," said the 63-year-old New Zealander. Sir Edmund, who also crossed the antarctic; said, "I still have the old adventure — even backpackodd adventure — even backpacking. But more and more I'm getting involved in people" and "the natural environment." During his expedition to Mount Everest, he said "the three our teach into the said, "we threw our trash into the rocks and snow, cut huge tracts of scrub for fue! Mount Everest is now littered with juck from bo tom to the top — and a few bodie as well." Six years ago, he said, I: helped establish a Mount Evere. National Park in Nepal, but nov has had secood thoughts: abc 4,500 foreigners visit the park ea-year, causing environmental pro-lems. Hillary, who recently attended a UN conference in London of the environment, made his r. marks at a luncheon at the Nation al Press Club in Washington.
